Subject: Having my say

We depend on water for our survival. Why would anybody want to risk contaminating it?

We have precious little of it in many parts of Australia as it is.

The nuclear power industry no doubt argued that they would take all necessary safety measures to prevent a disaster but Chernobyl and Fukushima prove that total safety cannot be guaranteed.

Same with the oil industry no doubt claiming high safety standards but again, this industry is not failsafe see, for example, environmental disasters caused by oilrigs such as BP Deepwater Horizon in the Gulf of Mexico and tankers such as Exxon Valdez, Amoco Cadiz, Erika.

I think it is arrogant and misguided for fracking opponents to think that they can finally have a failsafe industry. Fracking has already proved itself to be problematic.

We simply must join enlightened countries and US States and ban fracking nationally.

We simply must not allow fracking to occur anywhere in Australia, let alone just the NT.

I look forward to celebrating the decision to make and keep the NT Frack Free and to support into the future, politicians who have the courage to stand against industry pressure.
